Assistant Professor in Cognitive Psychology. The focus of this position is on core topics of cognitive psychology (such as attention, perception, learning, language, or decision-making). We are especially interested in candidates whose research program utilizes a range of modern methodological approaches. The area of specialization is less important than the potential to collaborate within and across department boundaries (including cognitive neuroscience and the SDSU Area of Excellence in Clinical and Cognitive Neuroscience). Candidates must hold a PhD in Psychology or an allied discipline and would be expected to teach graduate and undergraduate courses, mentor undergraduate, master, and doctoral students, and engage in department, college, and university-level service activities. Preference will be given to candidates with a commitment to a teacher-scholar model, strong record of peer-reviewed publications, current or clear potential for extramural funding, evidence of teaching effectiveness, and commitment to translational science that has implications for real world issues. Strength in advanced quantitative methods is also desirable as well as extension of research area to issues of cultural and ethnic diversity.
